Vertex distance is an essential component of any refraction. It should be considered in power calculations for contact lenses, excimer laser treatments and phakic IOLs.

For refractive corrections greater than a magnitude of ±4 D, the vertex distance is extremely important in determining the necessary power because there is a significant difference between a prescription at the spectacle plane and the equivalent power at the corneal plane or the phakic IOL plane.